Before the invention of writing, there were no books or newspapers. The knowledge of one generation was passed on the next by word of mouth. Naturally, this was liable to changes and misunderstanding. As a result, human progress was developing very slowly. Civilizations really started with the invention of the printing machine and we have become dependent on it until today. Thus, man's progress has been recorded on paper and passed on from one generation to another.

Every day, thousands of newspapers are printed and distributed throughout the world. Worldwide, they became so widespread that they entered every house. The first thing that strikes the reader in the newspaper is the headlines. These headlines are usually printed on bold colored letters. They report the latest important news of the last twenty-four hours.

We all know some people who have come back from a long trip and claim to have been transformed by their travels, the things they saw, and the people they met. Traveling creates lifelong memories and can be an ideal environment for self-analysis. Reading books about the street food in Thailand is great. Watching Travel Channel shows about Borneo jungle explorers is exciting. Looking at pictures of the art in Florence is educational. But let's face it, these passive experiences just can't compare with the real thing. Once you read through the benefits of traveling, you're sure to have major feelings of wanderlust. Whether we go to the other side of the country or the other side of the world, for a few days or several months, alone or with a group, when we are fresh out of college or newly retired, there is no doubt about it: traveling can have a profound impact on our lives. You can probably come up with many obvious benefits of traveling, like relieving stress during a vacation from work, or bonding with the family and friends you travel with.
